

CDF Lookouts 2006

Historically, the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection (CDF) has had as many as 77 lookouts located statewide. Lookouts provided the first report of smoke on the majority of wildland fires in what were once considered remote areas of the state. These days, the majority of first reports on fires come from people who live in wildland areas, or people with cell phones who are driving through or recreating in wildland areas. Because of this proven trend, and due to hampered visibility from air pollution, CDF no longer uses lookouts in Southern California. CDF lookouts do, however, still play a role in fire detection in Northern California.

CDF lookouts are staffed in several ways. They can be staffed by volunteers or by seasonal personnel. Most are staffed only during peak fire season, or during high fire danger times. On occasion some have been staffed throughout the fire season. Serious fire season conditions and extreme fire weather are two CDF's considerations when determining staffing for lookouts.

Lookouts that may be staffed during the 2006 fire season and the county they are located in is listed below by CDF Administrative Unit.
